TOM HAYDEN CAUGHT.

THE NEGRO WHO KILLED BEN LOGAN IS NOW IN JAIL.

He was Captured at Jellico and Brought to Hartford Late Monday Night.

THE PARTICULARS OF THE AFFAIR.

Tom Hayden, the negro who brutally murdered Ben Logan, a colored girl, at Melferry, the first week in October, and who escaped at the time, was caught Monday and brought to Hartford about midnight the same day. He is now in the Ohio county jail.

The story of the murder and the capture is a thrilling one. Hayden was seen by a Henson man yesterday morning in his cell and asked if he had anything to say. He made no attempt to deny the killing, but said it was done in a drunken passion and he was sorry about it. He said he was in company with several other dummies at the Logan girl's home, drinking wine, and that is the source of the conversation the girl became offended at something he said. She called him a vile name and intimated that his mother was a woman without honor. Quick as a flash he drew a pistol and fired at her, the bullet piercing her heart, and she died instantly. Hayden says he didn't fire a shot and that there were four or five left in the pistol. It was reported that Ben was Hayden's sweet heart, but he denies this and says she was only an acquaintance.

Immediately after the shooting, Hayden fled. The whole community of colored people in town was aroused and if he had been caught, his life would have been but a matter of a few minutes. There has been some talk of lynching him by men of his own race, and a few weeks ago a crowd of dummies from the mines was in Hartford and made dire threats in this direction. Governor Bradley offered a reward of $100 for his capture, and this was accomplished by a man of $50, made up by colored men.

Mr. Jack Chandler, the barber at Beaver Dam, heard of the rewards and took an interest in the matter. Hayden escaped to the mountains of Tennessee and engaged himself as a miner in the Proctor coal mines, near Jellico, Tenn. Chandler received information that Hayden was in hiding near Jellico and seeing Deputy United States Marshal C. Thompson, he asked the latter to assist in the arrest, as he was going to Jellico on business. Deputy Marshal Thompson had secured a day's vacation of the murderer before he left Beaver Dam. Shortly after his arrival in Jellico he said admission and entered a bill in which a troupe of comedians were performing, masquerading as the murderer of the murdered girl. Hayden was sitting at the farthest end of the hall. He walked to Hayden's seat and having told the audience that he was under arrest and ordered him to surrender. Hayden was unarmed, but nevertheless resisted arrest.

With the aid of several men, the fugitive was finally handcuffed and taken to the rear end of the hall.

The performance soon came to a close and it became known about that Tom Hayden, the murderer of Ben Logan, had been captured. A mob of negroes soon organized and started to arrest the Deputy and his prisoner. By adroit movements the Marshal managed to escape the mob and depositing half a dozen men to help him guard the prisoner through the night. He boarded the first train to Louisville and left before the crowd could reach the depot. Mr. Chandler left immediately for Louisville and brought his prisoner, secretly handcuffed, to Beaver Dam and there to the jail.

Hayden is an intelligent looking negro, with blue eyes and light complexion. He says he has several times been in jail for a "dope" and prides himself upon the fact that he has "gone to school." He seems very much "broken" over the murder and the capture, and his voice trembles as he talks about it. He realizes his situation and seems ready for whatever fate he may meet.

The talk of lynching has about died down and it is to be hoped that it will not be revived. There is no occasion for any rash action and the law should take its course. Hayden is safely in jail and his escape is impossible. In due time he will be given a fair trial, and he will receive the full measure of justice.

Mr. C. W. Taylor, of Melferry, is visiting relatives in Louisville.

The Christmas Games at Griffin's, Christmas time is the one bright spot in the year for the children. The lot looked forward to with bright anticipations and high hopes, and their most extraordinary thought, "Wonder what Santa Claus will bring me." It is a time that is never forgotten, and old people remember with pleasure the Christmas time of their younger days. Truly, the children should never be deprived of the joy and happiness it at this season brings. They should be encouraged with presents, and you may rest assured they will never forget it. We have collected our stock with a view to accommodating for any rash action and the present of all kinds and all prices. No child in Ohio county need go without a present if the buyer will only visit our store.

There is a difference—between Mr. Taylor's store and any other store, old or long running. Besides offering the pleasure and earning money for the children, we also offer a special discount to school teachers.

Elkton's New Druggist.

A business deal of considerable local importance was consummated in this city yesterday.

Mr. W. M. Terry, the well-known Elkton druggist, sold his stock of drugs to Mr. Chas. E. Rogers, a popular young druggist of Hartford.

The store will be closed Monday morning and three days consumed in taking stock. On Thursday next, the 16th, the drug store will be thrown open again to the public with Chas. E. Rogers as proprietor.

Messrs. Terry and Leigh will remain with Mr. Rogers for the present, and will be glad to greet old customers and friends.

Mr. Rogers left for the Eastern markets last night to buy a handsome line of holiday goods, which will be ready to arrive early next week.

The program was most cordially our new winter druggist, trusts that his business venture may be most profitable and that he and his good wife may find among us a congenial companionship.

The Louisville scorecard is quite a lot of scattered reading but work is being done to get a little private trial in which Miss Annie Griffin, of Hartford, became involved while in this city. It seems that Miss Griffin contracted a small board bill some time this last summer with a fashionable dining room there, which she had either neglected or refused to pay at the time. Last week she visited the city again and was arrested at the instigation of her former landlady and taken to the quarters of the county jail. The bill was soon paid, however, and she was released. It is not known why Miss Griffin refused to pay the bill until compelled to do so by law, but it is supposed she considered it unjust or exorbitant, as many such bills are. These simple incidents were made the basis of much talk by the city papers, and while deeply regretted by all Hartford people and by none more than the young lady herself, they were not sufficient to warrant the mere sensational stuff which was printed.
